Butter Diet Raises Average

Batting eyes of Art Graham star outfielder

HOW did Art Graham improve from a weak-hitting Baltimore Oriole outfielder to a slugger? "Butter and lots of it," says Art, who moved up from a .235 batting pace to more than .313.
"The doctor advised an essential change in the diet," says Art, "to eat more butter—lots of it. Do I think that is what helped me? I'm sure of it. My eyes are much better and I've twice the energy I used to have. The main thing was to start eating plenty of butter."
"Now my eyes feel strong and rested all the time. That's why I hit harder and fielded better. I can follow the pitch at the plate and get the jump on the ball in the field. My trouble originated from a bad nervous condition. I give the doctor plenty of credit because he advised me to eat just the thing I needed most—butter." This story isn't so unusual, says the National Dairy Council, as butter is considered the best food source of the valuable vitamin A.
Mild vitamin A deficiencies are common and even severe deficiencies occur in five per cent or more of adults. Dr. Harold Jeghers of Boston found that 600 adults who showed a vitamin A deficiency were unable to adjust their vision to dim illumination and had difficulty in driving at night.
Inability to adjust to dim light or night blindness is corrected with a vitamin-A-rich diet. Severe vitamin A deficiency over a period can eventually cause xerophthalmia, dread eye disease.
With large storage stocks of butter throughout the country the dairy industry hopes that more people will follow Art Graham's example, says the Dairy Council.

Frieda Zumstein Dies After A Protracted Illness

Miss Frieda H. Zumstein, aged 52 years, a former Mokena resident and for a number of years a resident of New Lenox, died last Friday morning in the St. Joseph hospital in Joliet, where she had been a patient for several months suffering from an incurable ailment.

She was born January 19, 1887, in Mokena, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. L. Zumstein. Following the death of her parents, Miss Zumstein and her brother, Arthur, continued to conduct a general store business which her father had operated for 45 years. They sold out the business later on and Miss Zumstein made her home with relatives in New Lenox. She was of a genial disposition, and readily made and retained friends. She was quite active in church work and became a member of the New Lenox Methodist church.

That she was highly esteemed and enjoyed the friendship of a very large circle of friends was attested by the large throng of neighbors and friends who attended the funeral services held Sunday afternoon in the New Lenox Methodist church. Rev. Mr. Ellis, pastor of this church, eulogized the exemplary life of the deceased. The floral offerings were beautiful. Burial was made in the St. John cemetery, south of Mokena.

Those surviving are two sisters, Mrs. Georgia Nelson, New Lenox; Mrs. Bertha Deveraux, Plainfield; one brother, Arthur, of Chicago; a loyal companion, Charles Nelson, of New Lenox, and many other relatives and friends.

Mokena Boy Scouts Progressing

The formation of a Mokena Boy Scout Troop is progressing in a very satisfactory way. All the applications of those boys desiring to join have been turned in and the Troop is now ready to apply for their charter and when it is received a Charter night will be held, the date of which will be announced later.

The new assistant Scout Master, George Dath, of Mokena, attended the meeting Monday evening and gave the boys many good pointers in the code of scouting.

The Troop has selected Bob Hommerding as leader of the Bat Patrol and Gordon Spiess as leader of the Eagle Patrol.

Starting next Monday evening, the meeting will be held for one hour, from 7:30 to 8:30.

Gordon Spiess and Billy Hommerding names were omitted last week thru error in the list of names of the boys who passed their Tenderfoot test.

Tinley May Raise Vehicle Licenses

The Tinley Park village board has requested Chas. Niemann, village clerk, to make it known that the citizens can purchase their vehicle license stickers for 1940 for $3 if purchased before February 15, 1940. After that date the rate increases every 30 days until the maximum of $5 is reached.

Kean Avenue To Be Widened

The Cook County Highway department has been making preparations of late for the widening of Kean ave., from 143rd street, east of Orland, to Palos. The highway is to be made four lanes wide from 143rd street to the present four lane section at Palos which will help greatly to relieve traffic congestion on this road. Property owners along the highway where improvement is to be made have been selling various strips of land so the highway can be widened to 100 feet.

Frankfort Pastor's Automobile Stolen

Monday night of this week an Oldsmobile was stolen from the garage adjoining the St. Peter's parsonage. The car belonged to Rev. G. S. Gerhold. Tuesday it was found in Matteson with 100 miles registered on the speedometer. Chicken feathers littered the inside of the car and it is presumed that the car had been stolen and used by chicken thieves. Several weeks ago a car belonging to Herbert Lambrecht, of Frankfort, was stolen and when recovered the speedometer showed an extra 100 miles, and chicken feathers also were found in the car.

Conduct A Scavenger Hunt

A Scavenger Hunt was held last Sunday night in honor of Bernilda Stuckey's birthday. Which explains the absence of a banana from the Niemeyer cupboard. Too bad Artie threw away that red ear of corn on Sunday morning. Johnny and Elmer S. had to climb a fence to find an acorn, never knew they were so scarce. At last we had a look at Hilda and Laura's baby picture. Now where do you suppose Bernice got that two cent stamp? And some are wondering whether those two autographs were the real McCoy. Ah, but the saddest of all was when the losing side had to treat the winning side.

Sunshine 4-H News

At last the big news is out. On Friday, December 8, the Sunshine 4-H club will present "Down on Abbie's Farm," a rural comedy. Now who's Aunt Abbie? And what sort of a person is she? Ah, but more about that later. The younger girls of this club are also preparing a short entertainment. Wonder what its like?

A Prayer of Thanks

O Lord, I'm thankful that I hear

And for the watchful care you

And for the time you listen when

And for the peace you bring

And for supplying all I need,
I truly thank you, Lord, indeed.

ENGINEERING FIRM SUES TINLEY PARK

The engineering firm of Chas. De Leuw & Co., of Chicago, who did some engineering work for the village of Tinley Park on a water main extension project about 9 yrs. ago, claim that the village is still owing them money for services rendered, and some time ago made a demand on the village board for payment of the alleged claim, but when the board refused to take action on the old claim, the firm in question filed suit in the Circuit Court of Cook county against the village of Tinley Park for payment of the fees claimed to be unpaid. Village Attorney Wm. Aitchison was ordered to file an appearance and answer the same. The village attorney and President of the village board, Francis Harper, intend to fight the case to the very utmost.

R., of Chicago, dedicated and unveiled a memorial boulder on the grave of Charles Denny, Revolutionary War soldier in the Pioneer Memorial cemetery on Wolf Road, south of Mokena, on Armistice Day. Robert A. Bechstein, president of the Mokena Civic Ass'n., made a very eloquent address, stressing the blessings of liberty and freedom which we inherited as a result of the contribution the Revolutionary war soldiers made to the cause of freedom.

Mrs. Vinton E. Sisson, Librarian General, N. S. D. A. R., spoke on "Value of Preservation of Historic Spots," showing the need of preserving them not only for the present but for future generations as a reminder of those noble souls who made his greatest of all Democracies possible.

Mrs. Geo. E. Harbert, Illinois State Historian, D. A. R., dedicated the memorial boulder after which it was unveiled by Lois Guindon and Norman Williams, members of the Mokena Girl and Boy Scouts.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies quite a number of pictures were taken of the visitors, the local people participating in the program and of the Memorial Boulder.

They came to America in 1924 and located in Chicago, where Mr. Schantz was engaged in the meat business. In 1928 they came to Tinley Park and have resided here since. Work On Hall Under Way

Construction work on the new Frankfort village hall is well under way. The brick work has about been finished and the roof is now being put on.

Henry Dearborn chapter of the D. A. R., and its members, for their fine gift to the community, which will always be cherished.

A suggestion has been made that efforts ought to be put forth to secure a cannon to be placed on the cemetery site. Two Civil war soldiers are also buried in the same plot.

The Mokena Oil Company station seems to have a special attraction for thieves. Wednesday night of this week a fifth attempt was made at robbing the place.

The windows and doors are protected with heavy meshed wires and gratings. The thieves pried off the lock from one of the west window meshed wire screens, smashed the frame and cut out a layer of hollow tile blocks from the wall adjoining the window and smashed window panes, but failed to enter the building, as nothing was found disturbed. The attempted robbery was discovered by Charles Burkhardt, a member of the firm, shortly after seven o'clock Thursday morning. Detectives were notified and took an iron bar and pieces of the broken hollow tile with them in hopes of finding finger prints on them.

This attempted entry makes five times within a few months that this station has been visited by robbers.

The building is located in the southeast end of town and is some distance from any residence. Two side tracks along the north side of the building usually have a string of freight and oil cars on them, shutting off the view of the building.

It is felt that home talent is responsible for the series of burglaries. Saturday night, while Mr. Burkhardt was in the office of the station checking up the day's receipts, he had the occasion to go out of the building rather hurriedly and was surprised when he bumped into a young boy prowling about the place. The boy quickly disappeared among some freight cars on the siding near the building.

In previous holdups considerable loot was taken and only a few weeks ago the office was entered during the noon hour and $15 in cash was stolen.

Palos Installs New Police Radio

In keeping with the progressive spirit of the new village council, Mayor George V. Hermanson announced this week that the new police radio system installed Saturday is functioning perfectly. Police Officer Ben F. Hyink has received several calls to date and the average time from the time the call is put through for police service until his arrival at the scene has been averaging about three minutes. The King Electric Co., who installed the original Police radios in Cook county, was selected for the job of installing the radio. It was also stated that the new village hall is rapidly nearing completion and it will not be long before the citizens of Palos Park will be enjoying the many advantages to be offered by such a fine structure.

Chicago Man Gets Church Contract

The contract for the brick and mason work on the new Tinley Park M. E. Church was let Tues. to Gust Nelson of Chicago at an undisclosed estimate. Work on the new edifice is being pushed right along.

Awarded Radio

St. Mary's church at Mokena held a party at the parish hall last Wednesday night. A radio was awarded to Mrs. C. B. Moore of Mokena.

Capone Goes Free After 8-Year 'Rap'

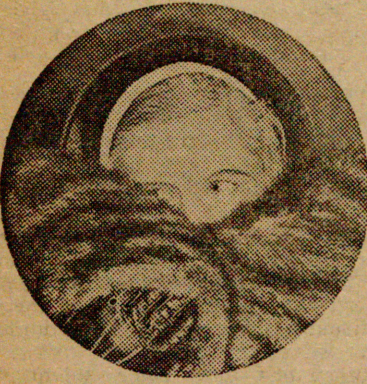

But Mantle of Glamour Is Strangely Missing From Scarface Al.

By WILLIAM BARNES

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

CHICAGO. — They tell you in this town about the heyday of "Scarface Al" Capone who was so rich he could squander $7,500,000 in eight years of gambling, whose fine Italian hand was seen in some 250 Chicago gang deaths between the years of 1925 and 1930, and who "beat" two murder charges and a couple of miscellaneous legal entanglements before the federal government caught him—on the small item of income taxes covering $215,000!

The Chicagoans don't quiver or goggle when you tell them Al Capone leaves prison this month. Since the spring of 1932, when he rode to Atlanta penitentiary handcuffed ignominiously to a small-time auto theft suspect, the one-time beer baron has lost face among Windy City-ans. When he steps from Terminal island correctional prison at San Pedro, Calif., this month, there will be few to cheer, sigh or groan.

Underworld Has Passed.

Not even the underworld will call a holiday, because Chicago's under-

Cocky Then, But What's He Like Today?

A remarkable picture of Al Capone made the day his trial opened in Chicago. Still flushed with success, he didn't expect the 10-year prison sentence that followed.

world isn't what it used to be. More-over the mugs who once worked for Scarface Al have heard stories about him.

First there's that paresis report—the story that Al is suffering from decay of the brain tissues and consequently has been deranged to a "dangerous" extent one week in four. Then there's his reputation as a model prisoner at Alcatraz, which is anathema for a gangster's reputation. One story says this former enemy of society has subscribed to a magazine devoted to social progress, "Survey Graphic."

Despite his efforts to win parole by good behavior, Capone had at least two scraps in Alcatraz. The first was in 1936 when James C. Lucas, Texas bank robber, knifed him in the back with a pair of barber scissors. Al dealt a return blow on the chin that sent Lucas reeling before they were both carted off to the hospital.

In 1938 a mail robber named Roy Gardner was freed from Alcatraz, bringing forth the story that he and Capone had mixed it up one day, and that Al was sent to solitary confinement four days as a result. Another paroled convict said Capone had been branded a "yellow rat" for refusing to join a mutiny.

But Capone's resolution did bring one result. He succeeded in getting three years lopped from the original 10-year sentence, and last January he left Alcatraz with only a year's imprisonment (on a misdemeanor count) and payment of $50,000 in fines standing between him and freedom. But after freedom, what next?

Even if the paresis story is untrue, the glamorous and reckless life of the mad twenties is no longer open to Al. He can only return to his home in Florida and relax with memories of the most insane period of American history, when organized crime fought with itself and with the law—usually to the latter's distress.

Johnny Torrio's Protege.

Al came from Naples originally. He had just turned 22 in New York when the notorious Johnny Torrio took him to Chicago to be bodyguard for "Big Jim" Colosimo, a former street sweeper who pulled himself into a place of power in Chicago's south side night life. Torrio was a henchman of "Lefty Louie" and "Gyp the Blood," who with others were supposedly hired by a Manhattan police lieutenant in 1912 to slay the gambler, Herman Rosenthal.

They were nice, clean fellows, all of them. Torrio seized control of Colosimo's kingdom when the latter was shot down behind his own liquor bar. He taught Capone the ropes of racketeering and built vice and crime into a $100,000-a-week business before he made the mistake of engineering Dion O'Banion's murder. Dion also had a gang, and they took a few shots at Johnny in retaliation. So Torrio left town to save his skin—and Al Capone inherited the empire.

The Business Grew.

Not many young men reach such eminence at 28, but Al was already a veteran. Undeniably a keen executive in his line, he streamlined gang warfare by introducing the machine gun. He expanded the business adding gambling, dog races and politics. This was a billion-dollar enterprise and he protected it by stifling the competition: O'Banion, O'Donnell, Gennas and Saltis gangs were "liquidated."

But it was bloody business. Capone once said they blamed him for everything except the Chicago fire, and that was no exaggeration. A new death was chalked up almost daily, and for two of them the beer baron was hauled in. Joe Howard, a small-time hijacker, told police before he died that "Young Al" had done him in. Later William H. McSwiggan, assistant Cook county state attorney, was murdered. His old father, a police officer, is supposed to have confronted Al with the charge that he, Capone, was responsible. Whereupon, says the story, Al handed his gun to the elder McSwiggan with the admonition: "If you think I did it, kill me."

Law Caught up at Last.

But even a ring of steel couldn't protect him at the end. They couldn't get him for murder, for election fraud or for violating the dry laws, but tax evasion was Scarface Al's Waterloo.

His notoriety reached a climax during the trial and in subsequent months when he languished in Atlanta prison. But there were rumors of an escape plot and the charge (which reached congress) that Capone was given special favors at Atlanta.

So one dark night in August, 1934, a heavily barred railroad car slipped into the prison siding. At midnight the great Capone and 52 other dangerous prisoners were hurried away. A few days later they were safely stored away in Alcatraz.

The beer baron died that day. When they release him this month, he'll just be plain Mr. Alphonse Capone.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Reviewed by CARTER FIELD

The Taft brothers—Senator Bob seems to need new glasses . . . The lagging electric industry is beginning to show new life . . . Electric power shortage is hampering Japan's war activities.

WASHINGTON.—Robert A. Taft, U. S. senator from Ohio, should read that old nursery rhyme that starts: "For want of a nail a shoe was lost, for want of a shoe a horse was lost," etc., winding up with the kingdom being lost because a certain rider could not get through to turn the tide of battle.

In the case of Mr. Taft it may be proper glasses. To get the answer one has only to go to his native town of Cincinnati and ask the first 10 people one encounters about the Taft brothers. The answers, or at least eight of them, will be that Brother Charley is a swell guy, a genial person with a smile, who will cross the street to say "Hello" to a friend, or slap an acquaintance on the back. The same eight, or more, will report that Brother Robert is a more self-centered person, and seldom if ever known to slap a back.

From close friends of the senator one learns that Brother Bob would be very glad to be a back slapper—not just to advance his own presidential aspirations, but because he feels that way. But the trouble, they confess, is that he has very poor sight. The reason he doesn't wave to people he knows across the street is that he could not possibly realize he knows them. He just can't see them.

Which seems to those of us who have been listening to this defense to be a sharp criticism of Mr. Taft's glasses. Certainly there is nothing the matter with them for reading. The most casual perusal of any speech or statement Mr. Taft makes will show that he has put a lot of study into it, that he must have read volumes in his research on the subject before giving vent to any public utterance.

Maybe the Senator Needs New Pair of Glasses

It savors just a little of a fiction story in one of the magazines a few years back, about a beautiful girl, with particularly beautiful eyes and a soulful expression, who for some reason was not popular. A smart doctor was attracted, and finally found out the trouble. The eyes were soulful because they were not looking at anything. They couldn't. She didn't mean to be high-hatting young men she had met a few days or nights before. She simply didn't recognize them! So the doctor forced her to wear glasses. They were married, and lived happily ever after!

Well, it might be that if Senator Taft had some amazingly good glasses, which would make him as able to recognize people as his brother, he would get a lot further along the steep and difficult path that leads to the White House. Certainly if he had been using such glasses for the last two or three years he would even now be a bit further up that road.

And it's still not too late. It is generally agreed in Washington that, of the two men concededly ahead of him in the race for the G. O. P. nomination last spring, one Thomas E. Dewey, has lost ground tremendously, and the other, Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan, has gambled his all on this European war issue.

Obviously there is not as much talk about Mr. Dewey as there was. Whether this is due to the "over-shadowing" operations by Attorney General Frank Murphy, or whether the war situation has made his youth seem more of a handicap, it is difficult to say. Whereas Mr. Vandenberg has not helped himself for the 1940 nomination by opposing the arms embargo repeal, whatever may be the situation with regard to public sentiment in 1944.

Lagging Electric Industry At Last Is Showing New Life

That big electric power plant to be built at Philadelphia, and the big play the utilities are trying to get for it, involve some very interesting angles. In a statement issued by the utility executives in Washington, stress is laid on the details—that it will have an ultimate capacity of half a million kilowatts—that it will cost $48,000,000—that it comes on the heels of new generating capacity at Philadelphia in 1938 which cost $7,000,000. Also that the new plant will take care of 2,000,000 homes of average usage. And that it would run 7,000,000 radio receiving sets or light 5,000,000 100-watt lamp bulbs.

Impressive? Well, it's all true, but a more interesting statement would also be true but is not included. Which is that this plant would have been built in the normal course of events; that similar proportionate additions to plant would be added to most of the privately owned electric systems in the United States, and that actually the electric industry has been lagging behind in additions and betterments.

The Philadelphia story is the direct result of a finding by the recently sabotaged war resources board that the weak spot of the war preparations situation, so far as power for war industries is concerned, was Philadelphia. This has not been given any publicity, but all the utility men knew what the resources experts thought, feared resulting publicity, and scrambled to meet it.

The utilities are also putting considerable emphasis on the fact that this big new plant is to be run by steam! There is a reason for that, also. The plant would have been designed to burn coal even if no other reason than efficiency were being considered, because the present expert opinion of the industry is that power can be produced more cheaply from coal than from water power.

Public Sold on Falling

Water as a Natural Force

But the utilities realize the public is not convinced of that. The average citizen has been thoroughly sold on the notion that falling water is a natural force, the utilization of which certainly must cost less than to dig coal from deep down in the earth, then haul it to a plant, and then burn it to produce steam. It doesn't seem natural that current could be produced more economically that way than by just putting a turbine under falling water. But when all the costs of a hydro plant are added in (the Norris dam in the TVA system alone cost $30,000,000), the accounting sharks say coal is the cheaper method.

But this comes at a peculiarly apt time for propaganda purposes. The famous Loup and Platte river projects in George Norris' state of Nebraska are making a sorry showing, made worse at present by the fact that there has been such a drought that they are obliged to buy steam-produced power.

Power Shortage Hampers

Japan's War Activities

The Tennessee Valley authority is not the only hydroelectric power development in the world which is having trouble. There has been a bad drought in Japan, according to reports to the department of commerce.

Japan never has had an adequate coal supply and, like Italy, has been spending millions trying to develop enough water power to cut down coal importations, and thus protect its foreign buying power, or rather permit the use of its foreign buying power for more vital things—for instance scrap iron.

The present drought is said to be the worst in Japan's history, but whether this is an exaggeration or not, it is certainly the worst drought since Nippon's hydroelectric developments reached their present magnitude.

Not only has the power supply to non-urgent industries been drastically reduced, but the country's heavy industries and even its munitions plants have had to curtail production schedules. The power shortage has become so acute that steel-mill operations in the important Osaka-Kobe district were suspended temporarily during the early part of September due to the sudden cessation of current.

The Japan Electric Power Generation and Transmission company, which was recently organized to control the Japanese electric power industry, has already received warnings from the military authorities of the grave situation prevailing in the heavy industries as a result of the power shortage.

According to the Japanese press, a feeling is developing in industrial circles that bureaucratic management is to blame for the present predicament, but this view does not appear to be warranted.

Couple of Stories Dragged In by Way of Illustration

Just what the bureaucrats are supposed to have failed to do is not made clear, in the absence so far of any satisfactory rain-making machinery. It reminds some observers of the time Will Rogers was defending the then prince of Wales, now the duke of Windsor.

"I keep hearing that the prince of Wales just can't stay on a horse," Will wise-cracked when annoyed at criticisms of the prince. "I've been looking at pictures of his falling off, and I notice that every time the horse is down too. I wish some of these fellows would explain to me how a rider is going to stay up when his horse is down."

But instead of wanting to shoot the weather man, the Japanese politicians feel that somebody ought to resign. That seems to be a normal Japanese proceeding. Washington chuckled years ago over a story told by the late Richard V. Oulahan of the New York Times. When riding on a train carrying members of the royal family en route to Tokyo, Dick pulled a cord by mistake and the train came to a grinding stop. There was a long delay, after which the train crawled to the next station. Then the military took charge. A day later an old friend in the foreign office told Dick the cabinet would have to resign because of this incident.

"But why?" Oulahan asked. "Well, it never happened before, so we have to resign," replied the official.

Dick was afraid to reveal that he was the cause of this cabinet upset, but got out of the country as fast as he could. Checking on his return to Washington, however, he found the cabinet had really quit.

Rotten Apples

WERE you ever a youngster back East, where they bought apples by the barrel and stored them in the cellar over against the long winter evenings?

When winter came, did you spend most of your Saturdays sorting over the barrels of apples, picking out the rotten ones so they would not make the whole barrel that way?

And didn't you and the family eat nothing but rotten apples the next week?

Isn't life like that? And didn't you live in the kitchen, because the parlor should not be mused up? And isn't it the truth that you lived in the kitchen all your life?

And didn't you always wear your old clothes, because you had to keep the good ones to go to meeting on Sunday? And as a result, weren't you run down at the heel and patched on the seat most of the time?

And did you ever get over it? Haven't you gone through life with an inferiority complex, holding musty ideas and most of the time the same old worn-out notions until they were ready for the grab-bag? Do you still wait for somebody else to step ahead and do the pioneering?

You do—if you're still eating rotten apples.—W. L. Y. Davis, in Los Angeles Tribune.

Bag Was Positively Golfer's Last Chance

The fat man decided to try golf. Armed with six golf clubs, a ball, and a caddie, he marched off to the links.

The caddie placed the ball on the tee. Then, with a terrific swing, the fat man whirled his club through the air. But the little white ball remained on its tee, while the club, meeting mother earth, broke into splinters.

The second, third, fourth, and then the remaining clubs shared the fate of the first.

"What would you do now?" asked the golfer of the caddie.

Holding out the empty bag, the youngster replied, "Don't give in! Hit it with this!"

SOMEBODY'S FOOLING Can Russia Help Reich?

WASHINGTON. — When Russian Premier Viacheslav Molotov made his epochal speech before the Soviet parliament on Halloween day, he stated very emphatically that Germany and Russia were going to improve their trade relations.

That means Adolf Hitler expects to get oil and foodstuffs for his massive army in exchange for machinery and finished products which he would send to Comrade Josef Stalin.

But somebody's fooling, say the experts, because Russia's in no position to help anyone but herself.

Disrupts 'Five-Year Plan.'

Last January Dictator Stalin made a speech outlining the third "five-year plan," during which industry was ordered to increase its production by 88 per cent. Agriculture, he said, was to be boosted 53 per cent. His speech, which is reproduced in United States department of commerce bulletins, said in part:

"It is undeniable that the country still lags behind the capitalistic states in an economic sense. Because of the low level of industrial production which prevailed before the World war, the present level is still below that of capitalistic countries with respect to per capita production in such respects as electric power, pig iron, steel and coal production, and the manufacture of consumption goods such as textiles, paper, soap and some others . . . This backwardness must be completely overcome before Communism can triumph in its historic competition with capitalism.

"The third-plan period is to carry further the satisfaction of needs and desires of the workers for foodstuffs, housing facilities and services of a domestic and cultural nature."

STALIN—What can he trade?

Compared With U. S.

How Russia lags by comparison with American production was pointed out a few days later by Pravda, the official paper. The per capita comparison showed Russia producing 1.1 barrels of petroleum for America's 8.7 barrels; 806 pounds of wheat and rye compared with America's 452 pounds; 1,722 pounds of coal compared with 5,953 pounds; 235 pounds of steel compared with 478 pounds; 30.8 pounds of sugar compared with 26.4 pounds, and 233 kilowatt hours of electricity compared with 1,120 hours.

Only in the two foodstuff items—wheat and sugar—does the Soviet lead. This year Russia had only 21 bushels of wheat per capita compared with 38 bushels here. The only reason she exports any of it is to gain exchange on the world market.

U. S. Trade to Suffer.

One other point the experts bring up. Most Russian imports in the past few years have been from the United States, which, in 1938, sold the Kremlin $74,644,000 in products compared with Germany's $11,849,000. Undoubtedly Germany would get trade formerly placed with the United States under the new co-operation plan. But since Russia's industrial expansion has been accomplished chiefly with American-made machinery, most of this must be junked if the Soviet continues her expansion with German tools.

The reason: A difference in designs and patterns, which would be death to industrial efficiency.

Can Russia complete her third five-year plan and still aid Germany? The experts think not. Somebody's going to get fooled.

Prologue to Love

THE STORY THUS FAR

Lovely, independent Autumn Dean, returning home to British Columbia from abroad without her father's knowledge, stops at the home of Hector Cardigan, an old family friend. He tells her that she should not have come home, that things have changed. Arriving home at the "Castle of the Norns," she is greeted lovingly by her father, Jarvis Dean, who gives her to understand that she is welcome—for a short visit. Her mother, former belle named Millicent Odell, has been dead for years. Autumn cannot understand her father's attitude, though gives him to understand that she is home for good. She has grown tired of life in England, where she lived with an aunt. Her father gives a welcoming dance at the castle. Autumn meets Florian Parr, dashing, well-educated young man of the countryside. Late in the evening Autumn leaves the dance, rides horseback to the neighboring ranch where she meets Bruce Lander, friend and champion of her childhood days. He takes her to see his mother, an invalid. His father is dead, thought to have killed himself. As soon as his mother sees Autumn she commands Bruce to take her away, that death follows in the wake of the Odells. Autumn is both saddened and perplexed. Bruce, apologetic, can offer no reason for his mother's attitude. Autumn calls again on Hector Cardigan—this time to find out the reason for Mrs. Lander's outburst. From his conversation she inferred that Geoffrey Lander killed himself because he loved Millicent Dean, her mother. Meanwhile, Bruce Lander rides to the spot where his father's body was found years before. There he meets Autumn, who, leaving Hector, was searching for a lost child. Bruce had found the child, and there Autumn and he talk of their families. They agree that her mother and his father loved each other deeply—and that their love is the cause of present antagonism. Florian Parr, at the castle for dinner, proposes to Autumn. She refuses him. The next day Autumn rides toward the Lander ranch. She meets Bruce in a herder's cabin.

Bruce rose abruptly, strode to the open door and stood looking out. A thin, misty rain had begun to fall. He tossed his cigarette out into the wet darkness and kept his eyes upon the spark until it died. He turned where he stood and looked at her.

"Autumn," he said simply, "you have been living in a world where men who were skilled in the art have made love to you. I know very little about that sort of thing. When I tell you that I've thought of nothing but you since that first night—I mean just that."

She looked at him gravely. "I rode over here tonight because I have thought of no one but you," she said softly. "But it hasn't frightened me."

"I've been thinking of one other thing, perhaps."

"I know, Bruce."

"Of course you do. We have talked about that. We will never know whether it was love that caused that tragedy twenty years ago. Perhaps no one knows."

"We do know they loved each other, Bruce."

"And we must settle between ourselves, once and for all, what bearing that has on our own lives. I have settled it for myself."

He moved back into the room and leaned against the table looking down at her. She returned his gaze for many moments without speaking. At last she got up impetuously and began to pace to and fro, her hands deep in the pockets of her coat. Bruce looked at her, and his muscles seemed to ripple all over his body. Her lithe, tempestuous motion back and forth across the room was like that of some beautiful, caged animal.

Presently she turned on him. "You and I have our own lives to live," she said vehemently. "It's absurd to think that we should be ruled by something that befell two people whom we can scarcely remember. They lived their lives as they wished—I shall live mine, in my own way."

He lifted one of her hands and kissed its soft palm. Then he took hold of her shoulders and turned her about so that she faced him. She let her head fall back and met his eyes solemnly.

"Autumn," he said. "My darling Autumn!"

Autumn slipped forward and was in his arms, and Bruce was kissing her in a glowing dimness which seemed to have caught them both up from the surrounding shadows. The rain drifted in gently over the still depth of their kiss. It was a rain that left a light, glistening web over their hair, their eyes, a young rain that spun them into one indistinguishable passion.

"I love you, Bruce." Her voice was a stumbling whisper. "Terribly—so terribly."

Her lips moved softly over his eyes, over the line of his brown cheek where a hollow came when he smiled, and over his lips and throat. Presently Bruce placed his hands strongly upon her shoulders and studied her face.

"Enough to stand by me against them all?" he demanded gravely. "It will not be easy, darling—at first."

"I'm strong enough for anything—with you, Bruce," she replied.

CHAPTER V

The Laird was still up, though it was already an hour past his usual bedtime. He had come back from town and had gone to his study to wait for Autumn's return. When he finally heard the door open downstairs, he was startled. The dead stillness of the house and the sleepy patter of light rain had drugged his senses so that any sudden sound would have disquieted him. But as he got up and went to the door of the study, his heart throbbed so that he pressed his hand to his side and caught his breath.

In a moment Autumn was at the head of the stairs.

"Why, Da!" she exclaimed. "I thought you would have gone to bed long ago. You haven't been worried about me, have you?"

"It's late," he said. "I had begun to wonder what had happened."

"Oh, I'm sorry, darling," she said, coming into the study and throwing off her jacket. "But I'm glad you're up. The fire feels good."

She went and stood before it, ruffling her hair with her hands.

"You'd better get out of those clothes," her father advised her. "They're wet."

"Not really," she protested. "I'll dry out here in a minute. I don't want to hurry away to bed just yet. It's so cozy here."

Jarvis seated himself before the fire. "Where have you been?" he asked.

"I've covered half the countryside," she said, smiling at him. "I started out early and rode up the valley for a look at the sheep. It's the first time I've seen them like that in nearly ten years, Daddy, and it was lovely—in the sunset and—"

"You had a lot to do," Jarvis said, disgruntled.

"Now, darling, you're not going to be cross with me for that," she coaxed. "I'm in no mood for a scolding."

"A lot of good it would do you anyhow," the Laird replied.

"Not a bit, dear." She laughed at him, then went and kissed him lightly on the cheek. "But I don't want you to worry about me one bit. I don't want to do anything to make you unhappy—and you know it."

Jarvis stirred uneasily in his chair. "You're going to drive down to Kelowna tomorrow—to the Parrs, aren't you?" he said, by way of changing the subject.

"Aren't you coming, too?" she asked him.

"There's too much to do here," he told her. "Besides, what would I do spending two nights away from home when there's no call for it? I like my own bed best."

"I may not stay over Sunday, then," Autumn replied. "I'm not sure that I won't be bored with it all—if the rest of them are like Florian."

Jarvis smiled. "You don't care much for the boy?"

"He's all right, darling—for what he is. I've seen so much of his kind during the past few years that I'm not particularly thrilled any more by the species."

"I can't say I'm sorry for that," the Laird observed. "They don't amount to much."

Autumn turned and gazed into the fire for a moment. She kicked a half-burned stick into place and watched the sparks go trooping up the flue.

"The fact is, Da," she said at last, "I came back to you to get away from all that. It doesn't mean a thing to anyone except those who are cut out for it. And I wasn't cut out on that pattern, darling. I never realized it so much as I did tonight when I stood and watched the sheep moving up the valley. It made me lonely as the devil."

"And so you stayed out all hours in the rain just to cure yourself of a fit of the blues," he retorted.

"No," Autumn replied softly. "I didn't do that exactly. I knew you wouldn't be home, so I rode on over to the Lander place and talked with Bruce for a while."

She glanced at her father's face to see what effect her words would have upon him. He gave no outward sign of having heard her except that his frame seemed to have become rigid and one corner of his mouth twitched nervously.

He spoke to her at last, his eyes gazing steadily into the fire. "I hope you are not going to make a habit of that," he said.

"Of what, Daddy?"

"You know what I mean, my girl. I don't want you going around with Bruce Lander."

"Have you anything against Bruce?" she asked abruptly.

"Damn it all," Jarvis burst forth, "must I be cross-questioned by my own daughter? Or isn't it enough that I should give my opinion and look to have it respected?" He leaned forward in his chair and placed his hands heavily upon the arms, preparing to rise. "It's time we were in bed. Let's have no more of this tonight."

Autumn did not move. She stared at her father, aware that she was becoming angry. She clenched her fingers and strove to control her voice.

"Da," she said, "I am not trying to cross-question you—and I respect your opinion more than the opinion of any other man alive. But when I ask you what you have against Bruce, I naturally want to know."

When he lifted his face after what seemed to her an intolerable interval, it was the face of a man grown incredibly old and worn. He passed his hand across his brows, and she could see that he was making an heroic attempt to speak.

Jarvis subsided into his chair. "I have nothing against the boy," he said at last. "But you know as well as I do that there are reasons why I do not want you to go around with him."

"I know what you have in mind, Da," Autumn replied. "I have thought about it, too—and I've talked to Bruce about it. Bruce cannot be held responsible for the fact that his father took his own life—and I think it a little unfair that any stigma should—"

"Will you stop this talk!" her father commanded suddenly.

All Autumn's resoluteness surged up within her. "If you insist, Da," she said levelly. "I should prefer to talk everything over with you, but if I must order my life without coming to you—"

"Do you know that your mother and Geoffrey Lander were in love with each other?" His face was blanched as marble, and even his eyes seemed to have gone white with fury.

"I do, Daddy," she said in an even tone. "And I know that Geoffrey Lander probably shot himself because of the hopelessness of that love. Bruce and I talked about it tonight."

"You talked with him—about that?"

"We had to, Da," she told him simply. "Bruce and I are in love. I'm going to marry him."

The Laird had risen slowly from his chair, like some tremendous iceberg lifting its appalling shoulders above the frozen waters of the sea. "God in heaven!" he muttered, and then, completely and without warning, he crumpled back into his chair, his chin fallen forward on his breast, his gaunt frame heaving convulsively.

Autumn flew to him. Kneeling on the floor, she threw her arms about him.

"Da—for pity's sake, what is it?" she pleaded, clinging to him.

He lifted one hand and placed it tremblingly upon her hair. His lips shook as he tried to speak, but the words would not come.

"Tell me, darling," Autumn urged. "What is it?"

He swallowed as though he would strangle, and shook his head. "You—you can't marry him," he said thickly, and then his voice sank almost to a whisper. "Geoffrey Lander—did not take his own life."

Autumn fell away from him, but her eyes were fixed upon him still as though in some terrible enchantment. Realization came upon her in agony.

"Da—tell me—did you—do you mean that you killed Geoffrey Lander?"

Her voice had been the merest whisper, coming remotely from her stiff lips.

The old man's eyes became terribly revealed, as though some power had gone beyond his body and murdered his very soul. They were suddenly stark and desolate beyond any need of words.

The brief interval that passed before Autumn heard her father's voice again seemed to encompass an aeon of torture. She sat facing him, her hands tightly clenched, sat waiting against eternity, hoping against hope, for words from him that would dispel the horror that had descended upon her. She saw his lips drawn back in a livid grimace against his teeth, as though the thing he must tell were too cruel for utterance, too cruel to be transmitted from his own mind into the awful silence of that room.

Summoning her last reserve of courage, she leaned toward him and took his hands gently into her own.

"Tell me about it, Da," she said, scarcely above a whisper.

Her touch seemed to restore the life that had all but ebbed from his gaunt frame. She saw him make an heroic effort to draw himself upright in his chair; she saw his hands pass across his eyes as though to clear his vision, and then the rigid lips moved in barely audible words.

"You're getting me, Geoffrey," he said softly at last. "After all these years, you're getting me!"

Autumn turned from him, her limbs unsteady beneath her, and hurried to the small cupboard in the corner. Her hands trembled as she poured a drink into her father's glass and returned with it. To her surprise, he was sitting erect and staring before him with brilliant, almost fierce, eyes, and color lay along each rugged cheekbone like a bright leaf. He ignored the proffered glass at first and Autumn seated herself on a chair in front of him and waited for him to speak while the silence seemed a grotesque din of the throbbing of her own heart.

When she could wait no longer, she placed the glass at her father's lips, and spoke softly. "Da—take this, darling."

Mechanically he took the glass into his own hand, and without removing his eyes from their gaze upon vacancy, he drained the liquor to the last drop. Autumn took the glass from him and saw that his clenched hand relaxed upon the arm of the chair.

"Thank you, my dear, thank you," he said.

"Let us talk quietly—and slowly, Da," Autumn said. "I shall understand."

She heard herself speaking, as though the words were coming through her from someone else, someone who had fortitude beyond fortitude, a stoicism she had never known.

His eyes rested upon her in a brooding gentleness. He seemed to be contemplating her, she thought with a qualm, from beyond death. She rose quickly, took a cushion which she placed on the floor at his feet, and seated herself with her head against his knees. So they sat, looking into the flames that licked at the great logs of the fireplace, while Jarvis unfolded the tragic past, sometimes stroking Autumn's hair, sometimes letting his hand fall in absent idleness upon her shoulder, as though he were communing with himself and had quite forgotten her presence.

She did not interrupt him while he talked, but sat gazing fixedly into the fire. It seemed to her as if each detail of his story were fantastically visible there.

"Your mother was a siren and an angel, Autumn," he said, "—as her mother had been in her time. Your grandmother's hunt breakfasts were the talk of the Okanagan—she had sent to England in the early days for hounds and hunters and brought them all the way 'round the Horn. Her daughter, Millicent, was even more lovely than she was. You must know this if you are to understand what I am to tell you about your mother—and if you are to judge her kindly."

He paused, and into the monotony of his voice came a break.

"Every man who met your mother, Autumn, fell in love with her," he went on. "It was so before our marriage—and it was so after our marriage. I never found that hard to understand—I had fallen in love with her myself. Nor was it hard for me to understand how she came to fall back somewhat into her ways of coquetry after we had been married for a few years. Men would not leave her alone. They could not, it seemed. She loved me—I have never doubted that. But I was many years older than she and she loved life and youth and gaiety. I was too set in my ways, perhaps."

He sighed, and Autumn patted his knee affectionately without speaking.

"There was nothing serious in any of these—these 'affairs,' as she called them—and she always tired of her admirers as soon as the novelty wore off, and as soon as they began to grow serious. It was an innocent sort of vanity with her, which she indulged quite openly. She loved the admiration of men, but she loved even more to let the world about her see that she was being admired. She would have found no pleasure in any sneaking love affair that was carried on where others might not see."

He paused while the clock on the mantel struck the hour. It was midnight.

"Not long after you were born," he continued, "Geoffrey Lander came here from the Old Country and bought the ranch that lay next to mine. We had been boys together in England. He was younger than I—a sort of ne'er-do-well who had married a woman of his own age who thought she might make something of him, I think. She had written to me and it was on my advice that they left England and came here to settle. I was as anxious to bring him around as if I'd been his brother."

One of the great logs broke softly in two, the sparks cascading into the glowing embers.

"Geoffrey was restless and reckless and full of charm. Millicent fell in love with him—and he with her. It was a new kind of love for her, but I mistook it for another of her brief infatuations. I knew it was different when it dawned on me that she never made anything of him when they were in public together. Discretion—that was new in Millicent. And then one day she told me—confessed that Geoffrey had won her heart."

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 7:1-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.—Luke 6:31.

"How to Win Friends and Influence People" may be worthwhile to study, unless it is done from a purely selfish desire to be popular so that one may make more money and get on in the world. Everyone should desire to make more friends and better friends, and the Christian in making friends should make them for his Lord as well as for himself. Actually the best of the rules and suggestions offered on this subject are already an integral part of Christian conduct as revealed in the Word of God.

I. Avoid Judgment (vv. 1-5).

By not judging others censoriously we escape such judgment of ourselves both by God and by our fellow man. The admonition, "Judge not," obviously does not mean that we are not to exercise our God-given ability to discern between good and evil, nor does it mean that we are to stand silent in the presence of wrongdoing. Verse 6 in this very chapter calls for the use of judgment (see also I Thess. 5:21).

In all such judgment we are to avoid an unkind spirit and the hypocrisy described in verses 3 to 5. We are to be certain that our own lives are above reproach regarding that which we condemn (v. 5). The none too common exercise of correcting our own faults will serve a salutary twofold purpose of improving ourselves and of making us too busy to find fault with others.

II. Be Reverent (v. 6).

While we are not to judge others, we are not to go to the opposite extreme of being so lenient in our attitude that we permit ungodly men to profane and trample down sacred things. This does not mean, as some would have us believe, that we are not to present the gospel to the lowest of sinners; for example, to a drunkard. Only thus can such an individual be saved. But it does mean that in dealing with holy things we are not only to be reverent ourselves, but we are to be careful that we do not permit wicked men to misuse and to profane the holy things of God.

III. Pray in Faith (vv. 7-11).

Here is a straightforward promise from the lips of our Lord Himself, assuring us that prayer will be answered. It seems that He must have foreknown that some would feel that the promise was too good to be true, so He stated it in threefold form and repeated it twice. Why not believe it, act on it, and receive the answer?

Observe that there is to be importunity in prayer, we are to seek if we would find. "Our Lord does not guarantee to us anything at first asking. God does not open His treasury to a passing bugle-call or the tap of a careless hand which just touches the door and then passes on. Prayer is not a momentary wish or a transitory whim. It is the utterance of a confirmed and persistent and unwearying longing. If you want a prayer answered, you must go on praying" (J. G. Greenough).

We have included the so-called Golden Rule under this section because the word "therefore" links it with that which goes before. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan aptly says, "If we omit the 'therefore,' we cannot obey the verse. If we retain the 'therefore,' and are driven to ask, to seek, to knock, and to know that the Listener to the asking, to the seeking, to the knocking, is our Father, then the rule is golden with heaven's own light, but in no other way."

The Golden Rule is really the fulfillment of the law and the prophets, but in the light of Christ's glory it is also a great principle of Christian love and consideration.

IV. Walk in the Narrow Way (vv. 13, 14).

The road to heaven is a narrow way because it is built to carry us through the quicksands of this world to a glorious consummation. It is not a dismal road, for it is lighted by God's glory; and it is not a lone-some road (even though few go that way), because Jesus walks with us.

The road to destruction is broad. The entrance is easy; there is much company, but one soon finds that the company is distasteful—just fellow sinners. Jesus is not going that way. The best people, God's people, are going the other way. The road leads into all kinds of by-ways where pitfalls abound. The earthly pleasures one thought to enjoy have, as Maclaren puts it, "a strange knack of losing their charm and at the same time increasing their hold."

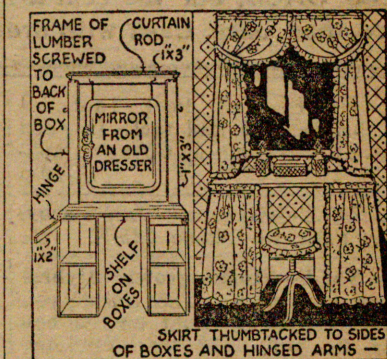

Full of Grace

I will neither be content with what measure of grace I have, nor impatient of God's delay; but every day I will endeavor to have one drop added to the rest; so my last day shall fill up my vessel to the brim.—Joseph Hall.

Now for the Mirror And Old Piano Stool

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

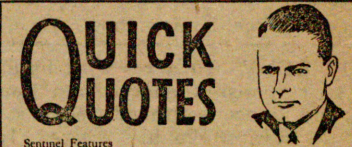

THE illustration shows what became of the mirror and piano stool which the bride had left over last week. To the mirror and stool were added two wooden boxes from the grocery. These were placed on end about 18 inches apart and a shelf of ½-inch pine screwed to the top. A frame was then screwed to the back of the boxes as shown here. A curtain rod was placed across the top and the mirror hung lengthwise under it. An arm was then hinged to the front of each box. Paint was next. White, because white furniture is smart and because it matched the woodwork. The flowered chintz in tones of rose and blue-green with narrow frills of the plain blue-green tone matched the window curtains.

The dressing table skirt was made with a one-inch heading at the top and tacked along the ends of the table and the hinged arms with thumbtacks through a double strip of the plain material.

PEACE

"THE greatest guarantee of peace is a public opinion that desires peace. Without a knowledge of the facts we cannot have such a public opinion. Give light and the people will find their own way."—U. S. Senator Henry C. Lodge Jr.

ACHING CHEST COLDS

Need More Than "Just Salve" To Relieve DISTRESS!

To quickly relieve chest cold misery and muscular aches and pains due to colds—it takes MORE than "just a salve"—you need a warming, soothing "counter-irritant" like good old reliable Musterole—used by millions for over 30 years. Musterole penetrates the outer layers of the skin and helps break up local congestion and pain. 3 strengths: Regular, Children's (mild) and Extra Strong, 40¢.

Power of Ink

Isn't This Why You Are Constipated?

What do you eat for breakfast? Coffee, toast, maybe some eggs? What do you eat for lunch and dinner? White bread, meat, potatoes? It's a little wonder you're constipated. You probably don't eat enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean the amount you eat. It's a kind of food that forms a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines and helps a movement. If this is your trouble, may we suggest a crunchy toasted cereal—Kellogg's All-Bran—for breakfast. All-Bran is a natural food, not a medicine—but it's particularly rich in "bulk." Being so, it can help you not only to get regular but to keep regular. You won't have to endure constipation, you can avoid it. Eat All-Bran daily, drink plenty of water, and life will be brighter for you! Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek.

Tinley Park Community NEWS

Epworth League Anniversary
 During the month of November one year ago, the Epworth League of the Tinley Park Methodist church came into existence. The membership was so small that first night that the duties of officers took in everyone attending. Through continual growth we now have twenty-one members.

On the twenty-second of this month we are going to celebrate our first anniversary by having a special party. It is to be carried out with a paper theme.

It will be held at eight o'clock in Bettenhausen's basement. All those who formerly belonged to the League, or belong now are invited.

Our accomplishments were few, but we are just beginning to stand on our feet. May we have the help of all in our future undertakings.

— Epworth League, Tinley Park Methodist Church.

"Mortals and Immortals" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, November 12.

The Golden Text was, "Henceforth know we no man after the flesh" (II Corinthians 5:16).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "As for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth. For the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more. But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children" (Psalms 103:15-17).

THANKSGIVING PAGE

Since the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock set apart a day after their first harvest, Thanksgiving has been an American institution. As a day of family feasting and pleasure, it has no equal on our calendar. But Thanksgiving has a deeper meaning to us, too. It is the day which we have specially set aside to give thanks to the Almighty for the benefits received during the past year, and on which we express the hopefulness that the next year will bring us our needs, and that "peace will reign on earth."

Preparedness Was Their Motto!

Thrown upon their own resources in a land of wilderness, the Pilgrims suffered untold hardships. They had made few preparations for the harsh New England winter. The lessons learned from their first year were never forgotten. Ensuing years found them well prepared. This becomes more significant to us as we approach the winter of our lives. Twenty-Year Members Feted In Cook County

As part of the 20th anniversary of the American Farm Bureau Federation recognition in various counties of the United States is being given to Farm Bureau members who have held unbroken membership in their respective County Farm Bureaus.

A search of the records of the Cook County Farm Bureau reveals that 182 have held continuous membership in this organization. "We recognize that these veteran Farm Bureau members who have believed in organization from the beginning and who have supported the Cook County Farm Bureau through thick and thin have been the back bone of the Cook county Farm Bureau," states President Harvey Adair. "We think that it is altogether fitting and proper that these men should have recognition at this time for their continuous loyal support. At first when the Cook County Farm Bureau was organized there was not many services offered for this membership. However, after these many years many services have been offered that have made membership in the Farm Bureau a profitable investment. Now that Cook County has reached the 2,000 mark and is the third largest Farm Bureau in the state, we believe that the recognition that is being given these men is of special significance in Cook county. Most of the people down state do not recognize that there are farming interests in Cook county; however, with the growth of the Cook County Farm Bureau to its present size down state people are beginning to realize more and more that there are many and varied agricultural interests in the county. We are the only county in the state having two Farm Bureau offices. The size of the organization has become such now that its council and advice is being sought by various interests in the county and we are able to influence such matters as tax assessments that vitally affects rural tax payers in this county. The organization is not satisfied with being the third largest in the state and with a little bit of extra effort we can very easily go into second place as Champaign county has just a few more members than this County.

"To these older members who have held continuous membership in the Cook county Farm Bureau, the Illinois Agricultural association and the American Farm Bureau Federation extends their best wishes."

Mr. Wm. Heatherwick, executive committeeman in Palos township is distributing recognition buttons to the following members at this time:

John Wachter, Wm. Macauley, Dan Sullivan, Ezra McClaughry, Al Roske, Geo. C. Mickelson, Mrs. Peter Lucas, Otto Bros.

PALOS PARK

By Miss Ruby Stockdale

Palos Woman's club held their regular bi-monthly meeting on Thursday afternoon in the home of Mrs. Walter Massey.

Miss Katherine McGuire is spending a few days in the Robert Harkness home.

State Beekeepers annual meeting and convention will be held Saturday and Sunday in the St. Nicholas hotel, in Springfield, Ill. A large crowd is expected as this is the 49th annual convention. Some of the speakers scheduled for the occasion have been selected from the Cook-DuPage Beekeepers association. The banquet is scheduled for Saturday evening. Foods made up with honey will be served to the beekeepers and a honey production contest will follow the banquet. Music and entertainment are also on the program for Saturday evening. The election and installation of officers will be on Sunday afternoon.

Palos Boy Scouts of Troop 699 had a report from the boys on their trip to Camp Owassippe at a recent meeting. The reports were the following: Troop 699, sponsored by the Palos Park Community church attended Camp Robert Stuart on Crystal Lake and returned with two of their members a member of one of the highest Camping Lodges in the Scouting system. That is "The Order of the Arrow."

The camp was approximately five miles from the nearest habitation. Upon entering the mess hall along with several other hungry boys, the group were instructed only as to what would be expected from them while they were at Camp. Each group were assigned to tents which would serve as their home in the Camping Community.

When the bugler blew that infernal thing for "Assembly," the boys gathered on the parade ground where they received instructions for the following day, and when the bugler blew again, the boys gathered in the mess hall where they ate. As quoted from a scout, "Ah, what a meal, nothing fancy, but good wholesome food that sure filled the hollow cavities in a hurry."

Troop 699 was assigned in a campsite with Troop 631. James Malloy was the leader of that group. Some of the boys passed their Scout tests while at Owassippe. The tests passed were swimming, life saving, boating, canoeing, forestry, camping, pioneering, cooking and allied subjects, such as reptile study, nature study, insects, sanitation, astronomy and other minor subjects.

A representative from the State Department of Conservation looked over the grounds as to the cleanliness.

The boys that were there to represent Troop 699 returned with samples of handicraft that they made while there and several of the boys have planned Camp again next year.

The Chicago Council of the Boy Scouts of America will sponsor several Camps near Whitehall, Michigan, to which registered members of the Scouting movement go to spend two weeks of work and play every year. These camps are located on Crystal and Big Blue lakes and are looked after by the Chicago Council much in the same manner as Camp Kiwanis, near Willow Springs.

The boys were instructed in woodcraft, handicraft and leather, wood, and art crafts, for the boys were there a few days and got acquainted with a few of the other boys, the entire Camp was as busy as any bee hive, just bubbling over with enthusiasm and activity. The boys went out for Camping and Pioneering Merit badges, worked out on the 40-acre timber lot, cutting trees, to give the white pine a better chance for growing. They also cleaned out the government fire-break to help conservation protect the beautiful and valuable timber in that part of the country.

In the 40-acre tract of land and timber, the boys were instructed in building lean-tos, lashing rope, and other allied subjects.

In the Nature classes the Scouts learned about the wild life of that particular part of Michigan, including the only poisonous reptile, namely, the Massasauga rattlesnake. Other snakes found there are the grass snake, water snake, and the most common, the blue racer. Also found there is the Western ribbon snake. Mr. Heifitz, the nature director, captured a blue racer and put it in a snake cage.

In the waterfront activities, many Scouts learned to swim, passed second and first class swimming tests, as well as swimming Merit badges. Other activities were canoeing, life saving and rowing. An interesting exhibition was a waterfront meet, in which canoe-tilting was the greatest attraction. Another feature was how to swamp, right, and again float a canoe, get into it and paddle away with it. In this same line of activity was a three-day canoe trip on the White and Muskegon rivers, and the Muskegon lake. The boys that took the trip complained about the weather, as it rained two of the three days they were away.

In the Handicraft Shelter, the boys made numerous articles of wood, leather and metal, among them being belts, neckerchief slides, watch chains, lanyards, tin can cooking utensils and other valuable articles.

Last Tuesday evening the Scouts held their pot luck dinner in the Amphitheatre, in Chicago, where several of the same Troops were present. There were approximately 37 Palos people attending, and by doing so also represented their home Troop 699.

Receives Medal Award

In recognition of outstanding scientific research in the field of night highway accident prevention, Dr. Hart Ellis Fisher, chief surgeon of the Chicago Rapid Transit Co., was awarded a medal by the Illinois State Medical Society. Dr. Nathan S. Davis, 3rd, president of the Chicago Medical Society, made the presentation of the medal which was inspired by the surgeon's "Night Hazards of Driving" exhibit before the Illinois society's 1939 convention in Rockford.

Others honored by the award were Dr. Ward's associates, Doctors L. H. Ruttenberg and J. L. Bailen, and his son, the late E. C. Fisher.

For the past ten years, Dr. Fisher has interested himself in the human equation in the night auto accident problem. His tests and studies indicate, generally, that "night blindness"—caused by lack of vitamin A, glare, insufficient artificial illumination, fatigue of eye muscles, color blindness and other factors—results in tragedies taking a toll of some 19,000 lives on America's highways last year. A summary of his findings, instruments used to test sight and reactions of drivers, and tabulated results are contained in the medal-winning exhibit.

Three preventative steps advanced by his research, declared Dr. Fisher, are (1) public education through acquainting the individual with his visual handicaps in after-dark driving and advising "self discipline" based on those handicaps, (2) strict enforcement of traffic laws and (3) scientific lighting of streets and highways for better visibility and to help man overcome visual handicaps.

Including its appearance at the state medical session, the "Night Hazards" exhibit has been seen by some 38,000 persons at other meetings and conventions, Dr. Fisher said.

Adele Cooper, Jack Erton, Nora Felton, Stewart Loebe, Eleanor Liston, Clista Margolis, Chas. Maddox, Jean Lindquist, Paul Sanders, Adella Schmaedeke, Ralph Town, Walston.

A round table discussion of each department preceded the general meeting.

After the meeting a reception was held and tea was served by the Hamilton Park Woman's Club in honor of Mrs. Whitehurst and other officers of the

Mrs. Chas. Maddox, president, called the meeting to order at 2 o'clock. A card and bunco party was planned to be given on January 5, for the library.

After all the business had been transacted, Mrs. Maddox turned the meeting over to Mrs. Ralph Town, program chairman, who in turn handed it over to Mrs. Stewart Loebe, literary chairman. THINK!

Armistice Day, November 11, 1918. What does that mean to the average American citizen? The answer is prompt. The end of the World War. But was it? True, guns were silenced, millions of marching feet turned homeward but the war was still with us in all its ghastly horrors. Millions of broken homes to which the father, son or brother never returned. Millions of broken bodies that did return and are with us still—a memento of the war that should make all of us THINK.

What was it all about? What was gained? A few square miles of territory changed ownership. Several small countries were born. An over-ambitious monarch was exiled. But today those new little countries are dominated by the same offenders of 25 years ago. The exiled monarch has been replaced by a dictator whose sanity is doubted by many. A despot far more ambitious and far more ruthless has again plunged Europe into the throes of another war—a war that promises to be more deadly, more costly than the last. Europe will celebrate another Armistice Day. November 11th will have become another day in history. This must not happen here. November 11, 1918, must remain the last day that any American shall leave our shores to engage in a foreign war. On that day we face east to show reverence to the unknown soldier who lies in his tomb, symbolic of thousands whose fate will never be known, whose bones lie in foreign lands. For what? Glory? Adventure? Democracy? Money? No matter what, the price was too high. Saturday November 11, marks the 21st Anniversary of Armistice Day, and as you face east in reverence, THINK, THINK of those rows of white crosses as far as the eye can see. THINK, of those unfortunate beings in the government hospitals. They are THINKING too.

Mrs. McCarney announces that the two main subjects of her department this year will be Analysis of Propaganda and Neutrality. All club International Relations chairmen are encouraged to attend the meeting and it is open to everyone interested in this subject. THOUGHTS AT THE TOMB OF THE UNKNOWN SOLDIER

By Dr. James Jacob Hoffer

Dedicated to men who died, that those who make the wars might live.

The ashes of youth that here repose,
What loss to the world! God only knows!
Taken from school, his home, his love
To fight for a cause he knew naught of.

In the making of war he had no part.
His interest in life was science, art,
What he'd been, what things he'd done,
What discovery made, what honors won!

A youth, ambitious to make his place
To be a credit to the race.
Perhaps some great truth he would evolve,
Some great problem he would solve.
Who knows the wondrous things he'd do
To ease life's path for me and you.

But ere he had a change to try
The war decreed that he should die.
And in his world he only leaves
A resting place for myrtle wreaths.

Beside his tomb the soldiers pace
Guarding his sacred resting place.
Guarded in death . . . what do they fear?
Had they guarded his life he'd still be here.
Perhaps some day the world will know
That no just God e're willed it so.

The spirits of those unknown dead
In every land for which they bled,
Arise and shout with all their might
"Let them that make the wars go fight."

Mokena on the Air

Tune your dials to WCLS at 12:30 p. m., November 25th and hear what one of Mokena Junior High School students, has to say about the Junior Red Cross. The boys and girls of the Junior High School are writing on the theme: "What the Junior Red Cross means to our school and its Activities." The best essay will be chosen by Mrs. Olga Wilke, Executive Secretary of the Will County chapter of the American Red Cross. The author of this essay will read it over the air November 25th.

To determine the needs in Europe the Red Cross delegation left this country October 4, to survey relief problems facing the various Red Cross societies in the countries involved. They will also consult officials of the Red Cross organizations in neutral countries as to the best method of co-ordination in handling the immense task. It was felt that a thorough analysis of relief needs would obviate the confusion and duplication of effort experienced in disbursing relief in the early days of the World War. On the basis of the delegation's reports the American Red Cross will determine, taking into consideration the funds available, what it can best do.

Workers in Mokena have begun the annual drive for contributions. You will receive a visit from one of these workers sometime between now and the end of the month. Remember that the contribution you offer will afford aid to the needy here at home and elsewhere.

QUESTIONS

Sliding Drawers.—Wax or soap rubbed along the sliding edges of dresser drawers will make them move in and out easily.

Removing Odors.—Odors can be removed from bottles by rinsing with cold water to which a little dry mustard is added.

Stuff Fowl Loosely.—Stuffings in fowl or fish should not be packed too tightly because they expand considerably while baking.

When Glass Breaks.—A handful of moistened absorbent cotton will pick up bits of broken glass without endangering the fingers.

Care of Electric Cord.—Don't twist, bend or tie the so-called cord attached to your electric iron. It is not a cord, but two bundles of wires.

House Plant.—The philodendron or devil's ivy is a fast grower and is a most satisfactory plant to grow in vases on a mantel. It may be grown in earth or water.

New Hot-Water Bottle.—Add a teaspoonful of glycerine to the hot water when filling a new rubber hot-water bottle for the first time. This keeps the rubber soft and in good condition.

Restoring Leather Bindings.—Equal parts of milk and white of egg beaten together will freshen leather bindings. Rub on gently with old flannel. Polish with an old silk handkerchief.

Using Celery Tops.—Celery tops dried in the oven and then rubbed through the fingers to a powder, make an excellent flavoring for soups and stews. They will keep for months if stored in an air-tight jar or tin.

Topping for Pork Roast.—For a tasty topping for that pork loin roast: when the roast is nearly cooked, spread generously with applesauce mixed with brown sugar and a little cinnamon and clove, then brown until a slight crust is formed.

HoweMEMORIES OF THANKSGIVING PRICELESS HEIRLOOMS
(Recipes Below.)Cooking the Thanksgiving
Dinner

Incredible as it may seem the calendar is bringing Thanksgiving time again and with it comes to every homemaker thoughts for the Thanksgiving menu—plans for its preparation and anticipation of the family's return.

Today, however, I want to reverse this whole situation. I want to suggest to you that enjoyment of your family on Thanksgiving day should be the keynote of every one of the plans that you make for the day. Now that does not mean for one minute that I am suggesting that the Thanksgiving dinner be slighted. I couldn't do that, for who of us for one minute would sacrifice those precious memories of Thanksgiving dinners at grandmothers that are really priceless heirlooms. No, I say—we won't sacrifice the dinner—but we will plan it so that you will be as free as possible on Thanksgiving day so that you too can enjoy the family and let the family enjoy you. A miracle you say? No—not really—just wise planning—plenty of work the day before perhaps—but time—no worry—and an easy dinner on Thanksgiving—and that's worth while isn't it?

How to do it? Well here are my suggestions. First, it is entirely possible to clean, prepare and even stuff the turkey the day before Thanksgiving rather than on Thanksgiving morning. Then put it on a rack in an open roasting pan and store it in your refrigerator overnight. If you have a mechanical refrigerator it will be running of course. If you have an ice refrigerator, be sure to get an ample supply of ice so that your refrigerator can really work for you over this holiday.

Vegetables—salads—relishes, including celery, radish roses, etc., even desserts, one and all can be gotten ready on Wednesday and as I say, then all that remains for Thanksgiving day is just the cooking, the table setting and later the serving of the viands.

Below I am including a number of Thanksgiving recipes which are all planned for just such Thanksgiving ease. And—a happy Thanksgiving to each one of you.

Roast Turkey.

Allow $\frac{3}{4}$ to 1 pound of turkey per person served. Dress, clean, stuff and truss turkey. Brush well with unsalted fat and place on rack in large open roasting pan. (Store overnight in refrigerator if desired.)

Roast in moderate oven (325 degrees) allowing approximately 20 minutes per pound roasting time for a 12-pound turkey, 17 minutes per pound for an 18-pound turkey and 15 minutes per pound for a 22-pound turkey.

Brush with melted butter just before serving.

Dressing for Turkey.

10 cups soft bread crumbs
1 cup butter (melted)
1 tablespoon salt
1 cup chopped parsley
2 tablespoons poultry seasoning
Mix all ingredients thoroughly and use for stuffing the turkey. Note: This amount of dressing is sufficient for a 10-pound turkey. If a larger turkey is to be stuffed the recipe should be increased proportionately.

Giblet Gravy.

Pour off liquid in pan in which turkey has been roasted. From liquid skim off 6 tablespoons fat; return fat to roasting pan and brown with 6 tablespoons flour. Add 3 cups stock in which giblets, neck, and tip of wings have been cooked; or if preferred, 3 cups milk may be substituted instead of the stock. Cook, stirring constantly, until thick; then season to taste with salt and pepper. Add giblets (cut in small pieces), heat well, and serve hot.

Oranged Sweet Potatoes.

(Serves 6-8)
Parboil 6 medium sweet potatoes, peel and slice lengthwise. (Prepare to this point on Wednesday and store overnight in refrigerator.) Arrange slices in baking dish and sprinkle with $\frac{1}{2}$ cup brown sugar, dot with 2 tablespoons butter and add 1 tablespoon grated orange rind. Pour over this $\frac{1}{2}$ cup orange juice and scatter 2 tablespoons brown sugar and a little paprika over top. Bake covered for 30 minutes in moderately hot oven (375 degrees). Uncover and bake approximately 15 minutes longer.

Creamed Onions With

Cream Cheese.
(Serves 6)
2 pounds small white onions
3 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons flour
2 cups milk
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
1 block cream cheese

Boil onions until tender in salted water. (This can be done on the day before Thanksgiving and in this way the onions will be all ready for their final baking on Thursday.) Melt butter, add flour and stir thoroughly. Add milk and salt and stir until thick. Then add 1 block of cream cheese broken in small pieces. When blended, pour over onions in a baking casserole. Sprinkle with buttered cracker crumbs and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) until crackers are browned. Serve at once.

Cabbage-Pineapple Gelatin Salad.

1 tablespoon unflavored Gelatin
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup pineapple juice (canned)
1 cup water (boiling)
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon salt
 $\frac{1}{2}$ tablespoons vinegar
2 cups cabbage (shredded)
1 cup pineapple (diced)
Soak gelatin in the cold pineapple juice. Add to hot water and stir until dissolved. Add salt and vinegar. Chill. Add remaining ingredients and pour into mold. Chill until set.

Pumpkin Pie.

(Makes 2 pies)
3 cups pumpkin
4 eggs
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups brown sugar
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon salt
 $\frac{3}{4}$ teaspoon grated nutmeg
 $\frac{3}{4}$ teaspoon ginger
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon cloves
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon allspice
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon cinnamon
 $\frac{4}{2}$ cups milk (scalded)

To cold canned or cooked pumpkin add the eggs (slightly beaten). Blend salt and spices with the brown sugar. Mix pumpkin mixture with the brown sugar mixture, and to this add the scalded milk. Pour into pie plate lined with pastry dough. Bake 10 minutes in a hot oven (450 degrees), or until crust is set. Then reduce heat to a moderate oven (350 degrees), and bake until filling is firm—about 45 minutes. (These too can be baked on the day preceding Thanksgiving.)

Homemade Bread for Young
And for Old.

All the world loves homemade bread and what is more home-like than the old-fashioned hot butterscotch rolls, homemade bread, parker house rolls, etc., that mother used to make? It's just those kind of recipes, (simplified though) that you will find in this column next week. Be sure to look for them.

Lowenthal Solves
A Problem

By SCOTT W. RYALL

(Released by McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

MR. LOWENTHAL entered the Ninth ward police station sadly. He looked old and weary as one might well be, who is an earnest merchant, waking occasionally from his financial duties to find his one great hope roosting in jail.

"Lowenthal," Captain Atkinson began without preliminary, "your kid got up another gang. You know he was president of the outfit called the Night Riders we broke up?"

The Ninth ward's jeweler nodded his head dully.

"Sure. Sure. But listen—what can I do with him? I busted a brush. I gotta belt that don't make no impression except he howls."

"Well, that's your problem!" the captain said angrily. "We've had just about enough of him. Last night he broke into a cigar stand." "I already paid Blumley for the damage," Lowenthal said hastily, "and it wasn't just Izzy."

"No, it wasn't just Izzy!" the officer snapped, "but those other boys wouldn't have been there if your son hadn't thought the scheme up. Their fathers will tell them where they get off but, Lowenthal, I'm getting sick of turning Izzy's case back to you. There's another way."

"You mean," the old man said painfully, "the reform school?" "As sure as I'm running this station. Better that one goes up than the whole bunch. This time," he said gruffly to the woeful father, "he's going home with you but the next time—Lowenthal, the next time I won't even call you in! Come along."

Lowenthal followed meekly out to the cells and when his son, Izzy, popped up from the cot it needed no second glance to see that his captivity had bred impatience but not repentance.

"Hi, Pop!" he called through the bars. "Jeez! It's about time you got around."

The policeman had the keys in his hand but stood looking thoughtfully, coldly, at the thin arrogant face of the boy.

"Izzy," he said forcefully, "I'm not letting you out just because you want to go. You don't like it in there but have you thought how it would be if you were cooped up until you were twenty-one?"

"Aw, gee, Cap, we were just horsing around."

"Izzy," Lowenthal said hoarsely, "you hear what Captain Atkinson says?"

"Sure, I heard it," the boy mumbled angrily. "I heard enough of what Cap says. Let's get out of here."

Suddenly Lowenthal's face set grimly.

"Captain," he said firmly, "will you get me a belt, please?" Atkinson's eyes twinkled.

"Gladly," he said briefly and quickly detached one from his trousers.

The boy looked startled at the impending and semi-public indignity. He started to blubber and when his father made the threat more realistic by asking the officer to open the door, he howled in earnest.

Izzy tried to dodge but four walls penned him close and in a moment he was wriggling helplessly under his father's firm grasp.

When Lowenthal had finished, he tossed the belt to the policeman and forcibly sat the boy back on the iron cot.

"Izzy!" he called sharply, then repeated it as a sterner command while the boy ignored him.

"Yea?" he asked tearfully. "That's from me. A good licking. You got it coming. You got a lot more coming. You're a smart boy, ain't you? A wise feller, too clever to be decent!"

He stepped briskly from the cell and slammed the door.

"Pop—" Izzy started.

"All right," the father persisted, "I give you your licking, you wise feller that thinks it's hasty to be a thief! Now, you think maybe I'm going to haul you home? Home with me? 'Yah,' he taunted, "think again, Izzy. The reform school for you and we'll have no more—"

The boy burst into a deafening howl of fear; of hasty repentance. Lowenthal took the captain's arm and quickly guided him back into the corridor.

"Lowenthal," Atkinson remonstrated, "don't you think he's had enough?"

"Listen," the merchant said excitedly, "I licked him and left him in prison. All alone, see? Well, he'll think now. He'll think about his sore bottom, anyway."

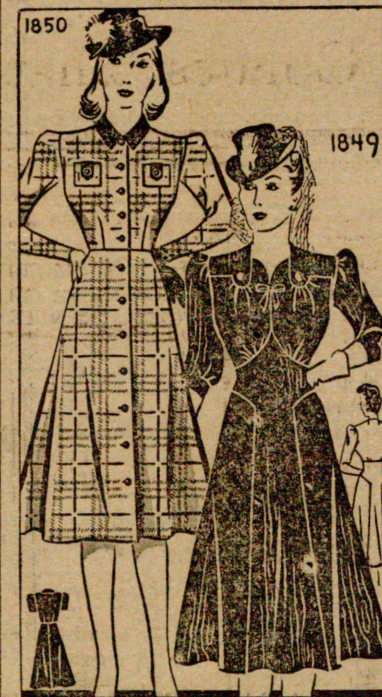

"Still," the other said hesitantly, "I kind of hate sending a kid to the school without giving him one last chance."

"The school doesn't come in. You keep him three days. Then bring him around and say you persuaded me to take him in again. You see, he'll believe I'll let him go to prison next time instead of trotting down here to haul him out."

Atkinson was grinning broadly. "Then there won't be any next time," he said.

The father looked fondly back toward the cell and listened to muffled sobs.

"I guess," he said confidently, "you guessed it, Captain."

PATTERN DEPARTMENT
SEWING CIRCLE

trimmed with contrast. If this is your first attempt at home dress-making, it's a simple pattern that goes very quickly and easily. It's especially pretty in plaid wool, velveteen or challis.

Smart and Youthful.

For large women, No. 1849 has beautifully slenderizing lines, and is expertly designed to give the round-bosomed, slender-hipped effect that mature figures look best and most youthful in. A good style for card parties and luncheons because all the detailing is on the bodice. The neckline is particularly flattering. This dress makes up smartly in velvet, faille or thin wool.

The Patterns.

No. 1850 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 and 40. Size 14 requires $4\frac{1}{2}$ yards of 39-inch material with long sleeves; $4\frac{3}{4}$ yards with short; $\frac{3}{4}$ yard contrast.

No. 1849 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires $4\frac{3}{4}$ yards of 39-inch material with long sleeves; $4\frac{1}{2}$ yards with three-quarter sleeves; $\frac{3}{4}$ yard ribbon.
